Introduction

Abbreviations used are as follows:

HS Headstone; BS Bodystone; FS Footstone

H Height; W Width; L Length; T Thickness

Imperial measurements are used for gravestones.

The recording of graves in Holy Trinity Churchyard, represented by this survey, took place between 1999 and 2000. It was prompted by the hope of building a parish centre directly linked to the south side of the church. Had this work gone forward, some monuments would have needed to be moved. The parish centre was not built. The record made represents the position and legibility of all stones in the churchyard in 2000. No changes, other than further weathering, have taken place between 2000 and 2011, when printed and electronic versions of this record were made available.

Philip Palmer, historian and lay sacristan of Holy Trinity, produced a beautifully written record of the legible graves as they stood in 1891. He undertook his survey to show the positions and inscriptions of the stones, many of which had been moved in 1887. This rearrangement had been carried out to allow for the building of the chancel and side chapels and to accommodate a wish to deposit spoil from the foundations on consecrated ground. Palmer's work proved an invaluable resource during the 1999/2000 recording. Wherever possible a connection has been made between the two records, though some links are very tentative. Palmer recorded 275 graves. The 1999/2000 survey noted 290 stones or fragments. Of these 60 were small pieces or wholly illegible. 230 were definitely readable or could be connected by partial legibility or position, with varying degrees of confidence, to the 1891 record.

In addition to the monuments noted by Palmer, the graveyard holds the broken ledger stone which marked Rector William Bannaster's burial of 1755 inside the church, but was moved out in 1887 and a memorial to Major Geoffrey Parnell and his men who were killed on the Somme in 1916. This was designed by his sister, Edith Farmiloe.

The burial ground has been in use since the thirteenth century. However, almost all the monuments now visible date from the mid eighteenth to the mid nineteenth century. In 1856, the churchyard was closed in accordance with new national legislation on urban graveyards. The Mount Cemetery was opened to serve the three town centre churches, Holy Trinity, St Mary's and St Nicolas'. A few burials took place after 1856, mainly of family members joining relatives previously interred. Since the closure, various modifications have been made.

The 1891 Survey can be consulted in Surrey History Centre: Parish Records: GU.HT 56/2. The History Centre is at 130 Goldsworth Road Woking GU21 6ND; Tel: 01483 518737; e-mail shs@surreycc.gov.uk

This, 1999/2000 Survey and supporting document, may be viewed online at <http://www.holytrinityguildford.org.uk/Buildings/Churchyard>.

An article, giving further background information about the graveyard, is included as Appendix 1 to this report. Appendix 2 provides details on the life of Rector William Bannaster. Paper copies of both, as leaflets, are available in the church and from the parish office.

The 1999/2000 Survey was made by Mary Howard, Mara Uzzell, Lindy Wotten, Christopher Wright and Maureen Wright. Mike Clements designed the data base and gave essential technical help in producing the printed record. Binding was undertaken by Mary Howard.

Appendix 1: Holy Trinity Churchyard Guildford

During the early centuries of western Christianity, the very special dead, first saints, then patrons and donors, were buried within churches. The ordinary dead came to be interred around the outside of the church to await the Day of Judgement and general resurrection. A marked grave was rare and much less important than burial in consecrated ground. In due course bones were often moved to a charnel house so that further burials could take place.

By the thirteenth century, the dead of a parish were named and remembered through the reading in church of the obit roll, particularly at All Hallows. For much of the medieval period it was believed that a soul's time in Purgatory, before admission to Heaven, might be shortened by the intercessions of the living. Prayers and masses for the dead were offered regularly. With the Reformation, these close interactions between the living and the dead were lost. Yet the wish for remembrance continued. More elaborate memorials were placed within churches; by the later seventeenth century, gravestones and tombs were increasingly being erected in churchyards.

Holy Trinity churchyard is a typical burial site attached to a town centre church. Merton Priory held the advowson for the church from the later twelfth century, but an estimate for the number of burials has only been attempted from the inception of burial registers in 1558 until 1856. The Museum of London Archaeology Service considered about 6000 burials a likely total for this period. By the mid nineteenth century, with larger populations needing more burial space and anxieties about public health, cemeteries were being set up and urban graveyards closed. A proposal made in 1840 that an additional piece of ground beside the churchyard should be purchased for burials was quickly abandoned. In 1856 the Mount Cemetery was created on the edge of Guildford and Holy Trinity graveyard was closed.

There have been substantial changes in the churchyard since then. In 1869 the church reopened after extensive modification. "Old Guilfordians must also not forget the state of the churchyard was anything but creditable" The Surrey Times subsequently reminded readers. Urged particularly by the local chemist, Henry Jeffries, the vestry agreed that the churchwardens should then oversee work on the surrounding churchyard, "according to their judgement." Grave mounds were to be levelled with footstones being placed against the appropriate headstone. Chest tombs in need of repair were to be dismantled, and the ledger stones placed on the ground. To the horror of one observer, worn gravestones were used to pave part of the footpath running between the churchyard and the parish room and cottages. Tiny fragments can still be found in the present path.

In 1887 many stones were moved to the wall on the west side to make room for the spoil excavated for the foundations of the new chancel. Further modifications took place in 1913, 1933 and 1946. A Garden of Remembrance for the deposition of ashes was set up to the south east of the church in 2005. In 1891, after the changes involved in making space for the excavated spoil, Philip Palmer, sacristan and local historian, documented all the legible graves. Some have since weathered into illegibility but can still be identified from this record. A further survey was carried out in 1999/ 2000.

Parish Registers for the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries show that gravestones have disappeared or burials were never marked. The deaths and interment of two priests fleeing the French Revolution are noted. The deaths of a sailor who fell from a coach going through Guildford, members of the families of soldiers serving with the Queen's Regiment and several founding children among others are all registered but cannot now be traced in the churchyard.

The great majority of graves that can still be identified, date from about 1750 to 1856. There is evidence of a few of the burials which took place before the tower fell in 1740, demolishing most of the medieval church. Some family members continued to join dead relatives until the 1880s and two burials took place after 1900. One monument possibly survived from the sixteenth century until 1824 when a descendant of James Shaw rebuilt the family vault; the new inscription seems to have proved less durable than the old, it is now virtually illegible.

However, existing gravestones provide a roll call of many of the notable families in the town during the reign of George III and first twenty years of Victoria's rule. The Elkins were prominent brewers and coal merchants locally in the early nineteenth century. So were the Chennels. The Flutters were also brewers; John Flutter played a major role in achieving the rebuilding of the church after the collapse of the tower in 1740. The Haydons, drapers and bankers, have a particularly fine tomb. The Charrotts were saddlers. Charles Booker, corn merchant, built Booker's Tower on the Mount in 1839, in memory of his two sons buried in Holy Trinity, each of whom died at the age of sixteen. The elder, Charles was drowned beside the town wharf; Henry caught smallpox.

Where it is possible to link names on memorials to baptismal records, other family trades can be identified. Thus there was a whitesmith (working in tin), a grocer, a maltster, a cabinet maker and an inn keeper. The memorial (now illegible) to John Chandler, who died in 1846 aged 41 years, reads

"My sledge and hammer lie reclin'd
My bellows too have lost their wind
My fire expired my forge decay'd
My vice low to the earth is laid
My coals are spent my iron is gone
My last nail is drove my work is done."

Several members of the artist John Russell's family are buried in the churchyard, including his parents. There is a portrait of John Russell senior in Guildford House. His gravestone notes that he was four times Mayor of Guildford and Father of the Corporation before he died, aged 92, in 1804. Edmund Brewer, rector of Puttenham, is buried in the graveyard because he had been Master of Abbot's Hospital.

John Bullen, one of the last people to be buried at Holy Trinity, (his wife Jane may have been the last in 1917) played remarkably varied roles in the life of the town. Henry Peak, the first town Surveyor described how "no detail was small enough to escape his attention; no complaint by a burgess was too trivial to be ignored; and there was no Corporation official too big to be spoken to. Clothier, prison warder, parish clerk, Penny Bank clerk, Savings bank actuary, secretary to the Public Halls Company, town councillor, alderman, auctioneer's clerk, charity trustee, Guardian – all these and more was Mr Bullen." He had been appointed parish clerk of Holy Trinity in 1852 and was still vestry clerk when he died in 1910. One of his tasks was to bury stillborn babies. These would have come to the graveyard at least until 1856 and perhaps afterwards. These tiny infants were not given funerals because they were unbaptised.

Memorials underline how often families had to face the deaths of children. "Four of his children died infants" is sadly typical. The care with which the ages of some of these babies is recorded may hint at the grief felt on their deaths: Sarah Finnimore 7 months and 10 days," and for an older child: "Robert Norton aged 14 years 3 months and 23 days." Other graves, however, show people living into their 90s.

Most inscriptions are conventional, but here and there some additional detail or personal reference adds humanity to the record.

"He was a tender parent
And the best of husbands"

(George Beeston d. 1768)

The Sibthorpe tomb, (though now illegible), described how Sarah Sibthorpe died "in the same hour" as her husband Thomas in 1795. The memorial was erected by their "afflicted family." Poor William Geale burnt to death in 1814, aged just five years. William Stevens' stone was "erected by his late master as a mark of esteem" in 1839. In the manner of a medieval memento mori for the living to bear in mind, the first stone at the Sydenham Road entrance reads:

"As you are now so once was I
As I am now so must you be
Prepare for death and think of me"

(John and Ann Tidy 1810 and 1830)

The monument probably most familiar to people walking through the churchyard is not a grave but a memorial to Geoffrey Brooke Parnell and the men of the first battalion of The Queen's who fell with him at High Wood on 15 July 1916 during the battle of the Somme. The winged, crusader-like figure was designed by his sister Edith Farmiloe. Originally it was intended that it should stand inside the church. Geoffrey Parnell was one of four sons and four daughters of Col. Arthur Parnell. The local paper states that he was well known and popular in Guildford while serving as adjutant in the 5th Battalion. Holy Trinity with The Queen's regimental chapel and memorial to those killed in the World War must have seemed the fitting place for this personal tribute.

There is a broken ledger stone dropped into the gully running between the south side of the church and the burial ground. Until the building of the chancel, this memorial was laid inside the church, in front of the communion table in the apse, marking the grave of Rector William Bannaster, who died in 1755. Traditionally this was the most prestigious place for any burial. William Bannaster had had a stormy relationship with the churchwardens and parishioners. Before 1740, there were arguments about how large a portion of the sacrament collection should go to the rector and how much to poor relief. Church repairs were also contentious. After the tower fell in 1740, Bannaster opposed the sale of church property in 1755 to fund rebuilding work. He was overruled by the Vestry Nevertheless, when he died later in the same year, his body was interred in the new church by then under construction.

Though only the Garden of Remembrance now brings those who grieve personally, the whole graveyard keeps in the minds of the living very many past Guildford lives.

Appendix 2: William Bannaster

Rector of Holy Trinity and St Mary's 1721-1755

A Turbulent Priest?

Information about William Bannaster may be of interest for a number of reasons. He is one of the few incumbents of Holy Trinity and St Mary's before the mid nineteenth century about whom we have any knowledge. He was rector during the eventful years of the destruction of the old church and the building of the new. He married a Quaker. Hints of his determined or awkward personality come through the records, giving some sense of him as one of the varied, individual holy people of God down the ages in these parishes.

William Bannaster's father, Thomas, was Vicar of Wonersh. So he grew up with a knowledge of clerical life. Described on his gravestone as AM, Master of Arts, he must have studied at Oxford or Cambridge in preparation for his ministry. The gravestone also indicates that at some time he took his father's place as Vicar of Wonersh. He became Rector of Holy Trinity and St Mary's in 1721, when he was 32 years old. He was the second priest to serve the united parish since its formation in 1698.

The parish register of St.Mary's shows that William's wife, Elizabeth died ten years later and was buried on 7 March 1731. He seems to have been in conflict with his parishioners for much of the rest of his tenure. Holy Trinity church was in poor repair in the early eighteenth century. The floor in the nave and chancel also needed to be repaved. The vestry minute book records arguments between the rector and parishioners about who was responsible for the cost of such work. Four members of the Onslow family gave money to the fund for the nave in order to "compose the differences of the parish." However, conflict continued. In 1734 the Vestry raised a loan for repairing the chancel. They also took the rector to court to try to obtain part payment for the work and to compel him to divide the sacrament money with the church wardens for distribution to "poor persons."

The repairs were not well done; Russell's history, published in 1800, states that the arches and pillars which supported the steeple were removed. Examination by "able and experienced workmen" showed that the church was unsafe for use and a final service held on Sunday 19 April 1740. On Wednesday 23 April, as the peal of bells was being lowered to safety, the steeple collapsed through the roof of the nave, smashing all but two of the bells and destroying most of the church. Russell's History of 1800 describes how the steeple "beat in the roof with such violence that by the compression of air all the glass windows were blown out as if it had been done by a blast of gunpowder."

Despite this calamity, the rector was able to marry for a second time on 22 November 1740. It seems that this wedding took place in London, within the jurisdiction of the Fleet prison and is recorded in a transcription of a register of such marriages. These were frequently clandestine unions, without banns or licence involving minors. However non conformist clergy also used the resource. The entry for William makes clear why he went to London. It records the marriage of "the Reverend William Bannaster, clerk, Rector of Holy Trinity and St.Mary's churches in Guildford, Vicar of Wonersh and Minister of St.Martha's chapel all in Surrey and Susan Lunn a Quaker of St.Mary's at Guildford, widower and widow." A similar entry was made in the register of St Mary's church, recording the marriage locally with no indication that it had not taken place in Guildford. "The Rev Mr Banister Rector of the united Churches of Guldeford was marled by licence of the Archbishop of Caterbury to Mrs Susan Lun of Tottenham in Middelsex widdow Rellict of the late John Lune Tottenham Wine merchant."

Susan may have been unwilling to accept the tenets of the Anglican Church so that she could be married locally. However, in April 1741 "Mrs Susana, wife of the Rev Mr William Banaster, being one of the peopel caled Quakers, was then Publicly Baptised by the Rev Mr Gifford, Rector of Stoke in the parish church of St Maris in Gudedeford according to the order prescribed in the booke of common prayer." Thus Susan joined her husband in the established church. Sadly only two years later on 23 June 1743 she was buried at Holy Trinity and the rector was again a widower.

In 1742 the site of Holy Trinity was largely cleared and rebuilding planned. Not until 1749 did Mayor Peter Flutter lay the foundation stone of the new church. The costs of rebuilding could not easily be met. In their History, the Russells comment "the churchwardens imprudently engaged in new-building of the church, and no means could be found for raising money after the subscriptions proved insufficient."

Arguments were still going on in the parish .The rector had had "a long paper war regarding a modus in the parish" with John Shotter (town clerk). Mr Shotter was described on his ledgerstone as "several years clerk of this town, vir bonus et prudens." (a good and prudent man) In 1751 he was moved to publish a set of letters "between a parson and an attorney, who upon some extraordinary demands by the parson, took up his Text saying 'woe unto you scribes, pharisees and hypocrites etc.'" There were obviously vigorous public arguments, with John Shotter feeling considerable anger against the rector.

In 1755 the parish decided to petition Parliament for an Act sanctioning the sale of some of the properties around the churchyard and elsewhere, so that building could continue. William Bannaster opposed the plan to sell church assets. The rectory was in the south east corner of the churchyard at this time. Perhaps he feared changed use for buildings close to his home. Perhaps he rightly saw that assets used to meet parochial running costs were being sold off. He refused to be present at the Vestry meeting. The Mayor took the chair and an Act was subsequently obtained.

Later that year, on 29th October, the rector died. He was buried in the chancel of the new church, now again under construction. Should one see it as a final victory for the parish or a magnanimous act that William Bannaster was buried in the new chancel? Was he forced to lie in the new church, paid for in a way he opposed or honourably interred in the traditional burial place for valued clerics and generous donors, near the high altar?

The fine ledger stone covering his grave was inscribed

HSE
GULIELMUS BANNASTER A.M.
Parochiarum conjunctarum
(SS Trinitatis scilicet et Sanctae Mariae Virginis)
In hoc oppido nuper rector:/
Nec non
Vicarius de Wonersh in hoc com:
Obiit
29 die mensis Octobris
Salutis humanae
Anno Aetatis suae 67

This may be roughly translated as " Here is laid William Bannaster Master of Arts recently rector of the conjoined parishes of the Trinity and the Blessed Virgin Mary and also Vicar of Wonersh in this county; died 29" day of the month of October in the year of human salvation and the 67th year of his age."

Whatever William Bannaster's standing in the parish when he died, his memorial was removed from the church when foundations were prepared for the new chancel in 1887. The ledger stone now lies in several pieces in the churchyard.
